WIDE+ attended and presented at the WTO Congress on Gender, 5-7 December 2022

The World Trade Organization (WTO) held its first Congress on Gender. The Congress' objective was to showcase research work conducted by trade and gender experts (members and non-members of the WTO Gender Research Hub). WIDE+ gender and trade working group members, along with members of the secretariat, participated in the event. And WIDE+ organized a civil society strategy meeting with academic Caroline Dommen, Senior Associate at the IISD, at the IISD | L’ESPACE during the evening of 6 December.

WIDE+ and WO=MEN presented a joint research paper during the research panel on "Crafting gender-responsive trade policies and agreements". Gea Meijers, coordinator at WIDE+, and Dewi Keppy, program manager of the gender and sustainable economy program at WO=MEN, highlighted the importance of meaningfully including and engaging with civil society, especially, women's rights organizations at different levels of trade policy discussions. Researching the EU trade policy with its different engagement mechanisms, the paper concludes that participation of civil society is seen to be limited at the level of token participation. However civil society is able to have some impact on the the policy, albeit women's rights organisations are much less present. This paper will be published soon - watch this space!

The Congress itself did not have a significant presence of civil society organizations, despite the importance of the topic. WIDE+ will continue to advocate for women's rights and participation with the WTO and the EU. If you would like to be involved in these actions with the gender and trade working group, please reach out to Gea Meijers at info@wide-network.org.

WIDE+ signed TRIPS waiver letter to the Mexican government to side with developing countries at the WTO

WIDE+ gender and trade working group has undersigned this letter to ask of the Mexican government to continue supporting the position of many low and middle income countries demanding a TRIPS waiver. Such a waiver would allow the cheap and increased production of vaccines and all other medicines relating to COVID-19 and be an effective step towards eradicating vaccine apartheid.

The letter was particularly addressed to the Minister of Economy Raquel Buenrostro Sánchez and Minister of Foreign Affairs Marcelo Ebrard, as they represented Mexico in recent negotiations at the WTO. The letter has been sent out on Monday, 5 December to Mexican authorities.

On 1 November 2022, Mexico submitted a joint communication with Switzerland to the World Trade Organization’s TRIPS Council in order to dismiss the extension of the Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights waiver decision that currently only considers patent exemptions on COVID-19 vaccines. In fact, the global South wants to include therapeutics and diagnostics—an extension that States agreed to consider when the waiver decision was adopted in June 2022. See also: #Fem4PeoplesVaccine.

A report on the ODI Panel
“From allyship to action: How men can step up to end violence against women”

Report by Lynn Watzka

Lynn Watzka, internt at WIDE+, attended the “From Allyship to action: How men can step up to end violence against women”, a public dialogue event organised by ODI and ALIGN on 22 November 2022. The event discussed the role of men in feminist change making and gave a platform to men who are already active against male violence in the policy making sector.

Sarah Pantuliano, ODI chief executive and panel moderator, pointed out that every country has an issue with male violence and it is time for men to step up. “A permissive patriarchal backlash” is happening, and the urgency to hold perpetrators accountable, change gender norms around masculinities, and men taking action in this to stop femicides and harassment is higher than ever.

The panel addressed a need for a paradigm shift and creation of platforms to address masculinities and male responsibility. The panelists discussed root causes of GBV in gender norms, and the power imbalance between them, male upbringing and socialisation. They also highlighted possible strategies for change which include fostering a culture of accountability, education and teaching boy's emotional literacy, creating genuine and safe space for men to embark on their personal journey to have realizations about their role in the patriarchal structures and its systemics.

New policy brief by Mama Cash, "Feminist foreign policy: stronger action needed to resource feminist movements"

Mama Cash’s new policy brief – Feminist Foreign Policy: Stronger Action Needed to Resource Feminist Movements – calls on governments that are serious about delivering on their promises and the much-needed outcomes for gender equality to be realistic about the investment needed.

At a moment when feminist movements are both making important gains and also facing increasing threats around the world, it is critical that the implementation of feminist foreign policies goes beyond political gestures and feminist rhetoric to deliver meaningful support to those at the forefront of advancing gender equality and human rights: namely, autonomous feminist movements.

New learning paper by GADN, "What is the role of Northern organisations in global justice advocacy?"

The paper explores the role many of those with ‘Global North power and privilege’ play in distributing (back) funds and other resources, and the extent to which they may be part of the problem in reinforcing existing power inequalities. Improvements in the way they operate are suggested, recognising and challenging power dynamics and colonial legacies. More fundamentally though, the paper identifies the duty of these organisations to challenge Northern governments and corporations for their responsibility in perpetuating global injustices.

Article: Judy asks - Is migration Europe's Achilles heel?

The EU’s failure to forge an effective migration and asylum policy undermines European integration and benefits the far right. Protecting EU external borders cannot come at the expense of migrants’ rights and lives. Migration is putting Europe to shame. Thousands of desperate people, many fleeing war and persecution, are dying in the Mediterranean.

This represents a humanitarian tragedy and a European failure. Read the commentary here.
